

Mexican university opens SkySong office

Tecnologico de Monterrey, a Mexican research university, is setting up a Valley liaison office at ASU SkySong in Scottsdale.

The office will extend the university's reach to Arizona, developing international programs and supporting binational cooperation between Tecnologico de Monterrey faculty, researchers and entrepreneurs and counterparts in the United States.

The Mexican university has already established a network of such offices in several nations and in other U.S. cities.

SkySong, Arizona State University's international innovation center, is donating incubation space for one year to help the office get started, said Julia Rosen, ASU associate vice president.

SkySong, located at Scottsdale and McDowell roads, hosts more than 40 enterprises from 11 countries including firms involved in e-learning, communications technology and sustainability. It consists of two buildings totaling 300,000 square feet.
